Chapter 1 "The Intruder"

* * * * *

"Topaz" Taggart is a sinister power along the border. He is foreman for John Marshall, once a prosperous rancher, now a fugitive from justice, hiding just over the Mexican border, with his daughter, Mary.

Taggart's gang are a lot of bandits. On one occasion, they chase Marshall, but he eludes them, escaping through a secret passageway, into his mountain seclusion. One of the bandits follows him but is captured by Marshall's henchmen. He escapes during the night and sees Marshall give his daughter a lot of money. Getting his bandit brethren together, the latter attack the girl after she gets out on the road.

Terence O'Rourke, a government ranger, lands at the feet of Marshall and his daughter on an occasion when his plans go wrong. He is helped to his feet and provided with a horse. On the following day when he leaves he promises to remember them, but does not disclose his business.

O'Rourke, on a mountain top, sees the bandits attack the girl. He dashes to the rescue. The horse breaks free from the buckboard and the vehicle unguided, dashes over a cliff, with the beautiful girl, helplessly cringing in her seat.
